2. CAPITAL AND LABOR.

The relationship between the preliminaries to the Paul Dirac equation (1902-1984) and the proposed productive factors (capital and labor) has not been explored. However, it is of particular interest to deepen the relationship between the problem encountered by the physicist and the possibility of proposing a similarity with some production functions, which is also based on the ingenious resolution found by Dirac (1928), the equations of his preliminaries. This attempt may suggest a new field of research that takes into account the interdisciplinary openness between economics and physics and especially in the relationship between capital and labor.

In this sense, the following work seeks to relate Dirac's preliminaries (1928), as two equations that express possible production functions, through a numerical example of productivity expressed by the capital and labor factors for a set of eleven countries for the year 1998, information that was obtained from the works of Aten, Heston & Summers (2002), Bernanke & Gürkaynak (2001) and Barro & Lee (2000). In principle there will be a presentation of some of the main production functions studied in microeconomics, followed by an underproduction analysis between countries, whose data obtained will be found in Annex.

Then a formalized presentation of Dirac's preliminaries (1928) will be made, under the assumption that the variables expressed in the equations refer to productive factors capital and labor, to finally show a numerical example that reflects how the determinant of the matrix gives solution to the preliminaries of Dirac (1928), can provide important elements to understand the relationship between the two factors of production.

2.1 SOME PRODUCTION FUNCTIONS.

Next, there will be a general presentation of some of the most studied production functions: Cobb-Douglas function, linear function, the production function of Leontief or fixed proportions and the production function of elasticity of constant substitution (CES).
